

SUNSHINE

MATTERS

Open government is good government.

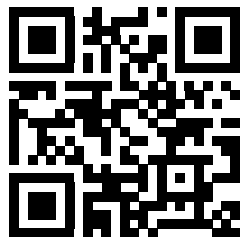

It's Sunshine Week, the annual celebration of access to public information and what it means for you and your community. South Carolina's Freedom of Information Act – also known as the Sunshine Law – gives you access to government meetings and public records. It is crucial to be aware of the important decision-making in your community. Journalists use the Sunshine Law to fight for access to government activity to help keep you informed. But as a citizen of South Carolina, you also have a right to attend meetings of public bodies, access public records and hold public officials accountable.

It's your right to know.

LEARN MORE

Scan to read the Citizen's Guide to the S.C. Freedom of Information Act or find it at spress.org/FOI

Brought to you by this newspaper and the S.C. Press Association